
Ayer Poster

Display typefaces for fashion magazines need flexibility in order to extend their lifespan beyond a couple of seasons. One way Ayer Poster fulfills this need is by having four different italics. In addition to a relatively tame italic matching the other optical sizes, the family features a Cursive with wild swashes, an aggressively stylistic Angular, and an unexpected Blackletter.

The four italics differ in structure and angle of inclination, but are tied together by weight, contrast, and proportion, making each work with the uprights and even enabling them to be mixed together in adventurous layouts. The delicate thins of Ayer Poster are intended for use at 100pt and up. Ayer Poster also has a Black not included in the other optical sizes, inspired in part by the lasting and unavoidable influence of Herb Lubalin and his stable of lettering artists, who transformed magazine design in New York in the 1970s.
